„Let’s Talk: Building Confident Communication“ for black folks and people of color

December 3rd 2020, 19:00–20:30

This workshop is only for black folks and people of color, and will center queerness/decolonializing gender and sexuality.

Talking about sex with your lovers: super hot, sometimes awkward, – or completely unknown territory?!

In this workshop, we’ll break the silence that so often surrounds sex. You’ll explore different strategies for effective, enjoyable communication with the people you get down with – and the ones you’d like to. Identify your own strengths and learn some tools that can help when you’re feeling tongue-tied. Through practical exercises, group discussion and space for private reflection, we’ll touch on topics including naming our desires, expressing our boundaries, the role of listening, and how to practice deliciously enthusiastic consent.

Sign up, speak up, and gain confidence that you, too, can talk the talk!

About the speaker: Geza works as a Sex Educator and Shop Assistant at Other Nature – Alternativer Sexladen. She is a neurodiverse PoC working-class queerfeminist with a background in education and has experience with trauma-work. Geza has facilitated workshops on art, sexuality and trauma self-care in different contexts such as community centers, refugee support groups and queer spaces.

For whom: This workshop is only for black folks and people of color, and will center queerness/decolonializing gender and sexuality.

Registration: Registration until November 30th via kontakt@frieda-frauenzentrum.de.

This event is part of the series “Feminismus_Körper_Empowerment” organized by Familienplanungszentrum BALANCE, SUSI Interkulturelles Frauenzentrum and FRIEDA-Beratungszentrum für Frauen.*
